Questions 26– 30

Perhaps all cultures in the world have had superstitions relating physical features of the body to personality traits. __(26)__ England had a large number of such beliefs in the past. People with red hair were believed to be naturally hot-tempered. Black or dark brown hair was believed to indicate strength of character, __(27)__ light colored hair implied the opposite. The shape of one's ears and nose were also said to be __(28)__ of personality and character. Small ears indicated a gentle, delicate character, while people with thick, large ears were believed to be of a rough nature. People with prominent noses were __(29)__ to be intelligent and determined, while those with thin noses were believed to be jealous and uncertain. Few people nowadays are even aware of these old superstitions, let alone __(30)__ to believe them now. Yet some scholars say that subconsciously many of these beliefs might still exist.
